

The Sequel to WACO: THE BIG LIE Video is Now ready! It is Called WACO, THE BIG LIE CONTINUES

Questions and problems:

There were 140 men, women, and children inside that compound when the raid and siege on the Mount Carmel Branch Davidians began on February 28, 1993, near Waco, Texas.

Why was a small child outside when the firing began?

Why are we shown the ATF agents carrying a small body to an ambulance?

It is believed that 308-caliber machine guns may have been in the three helicopters, circling overhead during the raid.

Why were there several reports from those inside the compound that bullets came down through the roof into the compound?

When Dick DeGuerin, Koresh's attorney, entered the compound, he saw bullet holes in the ceiling, and was told that one of them killed a mother while she was nursing her baby.

Jack Harwell, the county sheriff in Waco, had repeatedly said earlier, "There's no evidence of child abuse out there."

Janet Reno later said, "We had concerns for the children," and that the attacks were made to protect the children. Why then was a man from the Dakotas, who had brought cans of baby food for the besieged children, handcuffed and taken away—without delivery of the food to those children?

Later, during the day of the fire, agents were seen getting in and out of the tanks. A tank stopped above the underground bunker, closing off any means of escape from it. It was later learned that pieces of concrete fell upon the children inside.

Why was a masonite-exterior, wood frame building called "a fortress-like compound" in the later official Treasury Department Report?

Why did the warrant for the raid state that the objective was to attack a church in the United States? The warrant read: "Seventh-day Adventist Davidian church."

Why was the raid carried out anyway, after the "element of surprise" was lost?

Why did the ATF contact television stations ahead of time?

Why was NBC able to so quickly televise an enacted version of the raid only a few days later? If it had been prepared after the raid, why was it so totally inaccurate to the video facts of what happened during the raid—even showing an agent dropping dead from a head wound before the front door? No agents died, or were even wounded, anywhere near that area.

Why were military advisors planning the raid on U.S. citizens, and advised the agents during the siege and final fire-setting of the building?

Why was information from a U.S. Army psychological brainwashing training and operations manual (Psyop) used in an attempt to mentally and emotionally gain control of those imprisoned citizens?

The official Treasury Department Report later said that the ATF knew in advance that the Waco newspaper report on Koresh (by the Tribune Herald) would begin releasing the series on Saturday, February 27, and that was the reason it moved the raid up from Monday March 1, to Sunday morning, February 28.

If the ATF was planning the raid for Monday, March 1, why was the country sheriff's warrant for the raid (which was signed on February 25) officially listed as expiring on the 28th?

An additional feature: The warrant was not activated (presented to the sheriff's office) until Monday, the 1st—the day after the raid occurred.

"They came right in, parked by the front door and made a frontal assault on the building."—Waco reporter, John McLemore, eyewitness, who observed the action from across the road on February 28, 1993.

The Associated Press report said 100 agents arrived in livestock trailers, jumped out, and stormed the main home. Many women and children were inside, and that fact was known in advance.

There was no mention of any barrage of gunfire coming from the compound in any of those early reports.

As soon as the raiders arrived, Koresh stepped outside and asked them to stop, because there were women and children inside. He was answered with gunfire, fell back into the house and was wounded.

Immediately afterward, a call was placed to 911, and the phone was handed to Koresh. He said there were 75 men around the building, "and they're shooting at us! There's women and children in here; tell them to call it off!"

Throughout the lengthy, official Treasury Report, there was never any mention of a plan to knock at the door or announce their presence.

"The agency planned the entire raid, using dynamic entry techniques."—Treasury Report. This is a synonym for a commando attack.

"They started firing at me, and I fell back at the door."—Koresh.

The ATF later reported that such a powerful hail of bullets came outward through that front door, that it bowed outward. But careful examination of that door (taken by video later on that same day), showed the door not bowed outward, but still ajar. In addition, bullets coming out would have caused deep splinters on the outer wood. Yet this was not seen on the door or the walls. All the holes were neat and round.

There was no evidence in any of the videos of any
